I had the good fortune to visit Kanewai Spring about a year ago. How wonderful that such a cultural treasure still remains, nearly intact, in the Kuliouou area. As a teacher, I constantly remind students about the value of maintaining native cultural sites and learning the history of those sites because they connect us to a time when care of the earth and its resources (like this spring) were as much a part of living as care of one's own family. Everything is connected--health and wellness of the people depends on health and wellness of the land and its resources. I encourage funding to care for this place and support having the community, itself, take responsibility for the health and wellness of that significant cultural site, as well as for the whole area. Having and being part of a caring community, one that includes all resources in it, past and present, breathes life into an otherwise disconnected populace. Please reinstate funding to pre serve this site. Thank you for helping to malama aina, kai, and wai.
