STATE SURPLUS

Will rightful owners get money returned?

One day a man and a woman found a large sack of money on their porch. The money was clearly marked with the owner's name, address and phone number. They immediately tossed away the identifying information and, so they believed, any responsibility to the rightful owner. Then they proceeded to think of all the wonderful ways they could spend the money that wasn't theirs.

Today our state government finds itself in a similar position. It has a large surplus that isn't the state's and it knows whom it belongs to. I'm curious, will it return the money to its rightful owner?
